

Upskilling programs are not just a necessity to stay ahead of your competition – they are vital to employee satisfaction and growth.

In fact, NBF research shows that employees consider having dedicated training rooms an important factor in their employer demonstrating its investment in their growth and satisfaction.* To get the most out of in-person training programs, you need a dedicated training space that enhances the learning experience. A well-designed training space helps foster an environment where learning and development can thrive and demonstrates to employees that you're committed to their growth.

Evaluate whether your workspace supports effective, in-person training programs by answering these questions:
